

About our letter to Nadhim Zahawi MP

There is now an injection for COVID-19.

The government has decided which groups of people should get the injection first.

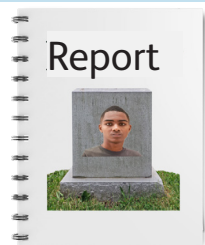

Nadhim Zahawi MP is in charge of people getting injections for COVID-19.

We have written him a letter to ask that people with learning disabilities are given their injections at the same time as support workers.

Why we think you should have an injection sooner

Public Health England have written a report report that says that people with learning disabilities are more likely to die if they get COVID-19.

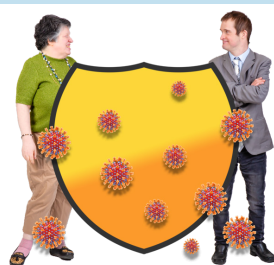

The report says that people with a learning disability are dying younger from COVID-19 than other people.

Why people with learning disabilities are more likely to die from COVID-19

We believe that more people with learning disabilities are dying from COVID-19 because they do not get fair health care.

Some people with learning disabilities have other health problems that can make COVID-19 dangerous if they catch it.

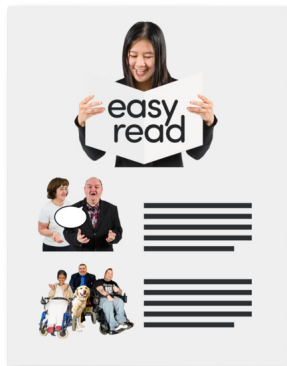

We know that you have had a hard time in the pandemic and you have not been able to see family or friends.

What we have said to Nadhim Zahawi MP

We have asked that he speak to the government about giving people with learning disabilities the COVID-19 injection sooner.

We have also asked that the government give information about the injection in easy read so people can decide if they want the injection.

We have said that people with learning disabilities are unhappy and getting the injection sooner will make them happy.

What you can do

We have written a letter that you can use to write to your MP.

The letter has spaces for you to tell your MP why this is important to you.

You can email the letter to your MP.
